Fellowships
in the United States

Academic Year
1995 - 1996

A. FELLOWSHIPS 1995/1996 in the United States

1. At the Center for West European Studies and the Center for International Business Education and Research University of Washington, Seattle

The University of Washington in Seattle is the largest and most respected university in the Northwest quadrant of the US, and is noted for its international programs. The EU Fellow will be hosted Jointly by the Center for West European Studies (CWES) in the Jackson School of International Studies and the Center for International Business Education and Research (CIBER) in the School of Business. Ideally, the EU Fellow would participate fully in the academic life of both centers. The Fellow would teach two seminars during the academic year, help to organize special events related to the EU, and give talks in other courses and in the community. Each seminar would involve one or two class meetings per week, for ten weeks. Some financial support for course teaching will be made available by the University.

The ideal profile for an EC Fellow would be a person who has a strong background and experience in the relationships of the European Community with the rest of the world. The University is especially interested in somebody with a background in economic and financial affairs, industrial and competition policy, or international trade. Ideally, the person would have some academic experience or a strong interest in teaching. The academic year runs from end of September 1995 through mid June 1996.

2. At the Center for International Affairs, Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass.

The Community institutions will send a senior permanent official with 15-20 years professional experience to the Center for international Affairs, at Harvard University, as a Fellow for the academic year August 15, 1995 to June 30, 1996

Fellowship at Harvard C.F.I.A.

The principal objectives of the Center for International Affairs are to encourage interdisciplinary research on major problems in the field of international affairs and to promote and pursue an interest in international affairs at Harvard University, largely through informal educational activities among faculty members, fellows, research associates, students and various other groups.

Each year the Center gathers a group of about twenty people involved in international affairs, mainly senior officials from various countries around the world, who spend a full academic year as Fellows of the Center doing intensive study. Fellows hold appointments as Officers of the University and thus have access to virtually all the resources of the University. They are colleagues of the Faculty, not students. The Program is structured to maximize Fellows' opportunity to pursue their own interests in their own way. Some concentrate on research and writing, others focus on new developments in their fields, attending seminars and lectures at Harvard, MIT and other universities in the Boston area. Still others will organize a seminar or workshop on a specific subject of interest. Most do some of all of these. Each Fellow is encouraged to write at least one analytical paper on a self-selected topic.

With varied geographical and professional backgrounds, with different ways of looking at the world and diverse analytical and decision-making experience. Fellows have much to offer and receive from their colleagues. The University environment permits a quality of uninhibited discussion seldom achieved in official contacts.

The Center and other divisions of the University take broad interest in European Community policies. Areas of particular interest include the role of the European Community in the world (e.g. international relations of a strategic, political or commercial character), the evolution of Community institutions, as well as Community policies in the field of new technologies, for example.

Besides participating in seminars on a wide variety of topics in international affairs organised by the Center, the EC Fellow should closely cooperate with Harvard's Center for European Studies. In addition, other departments of Harvard University might request help in organising courses, seminars or study groups on some aspects of the European Community. The Commission's Washington Delegation could likewise request the Fellow to speak on certain occasions.

3. At the C.E.C.S. (Center for European Community Studies), George Mason University, Fairfax, Virginia.

George Mason University's Center for European Community Studies organizes courses, conducts research, and collects documentation on all aspects of European integration. The Center welcomes EC officials who have specific research interests, but who also have a sound knowledge of the EC's history, institutions and policies. In other words, prospective Fellows should be generalists as well as specialists, so that they can work effectively with a diverse student body (at the upper-division undergraduate and the graduate levels). The Center's location in Arlington, Virginia, across the river from Washington, D.C, makes it possible for Fellows to mine a wealth of research material, and to become acquainted with a host of research Institutions, in the U.S. capital.

4. At the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, Tufts University - Medford, Massachusetts

The Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy was established by Tufts University with the assistance of Harvard University in 1933 as America's first graduate professional school of international relations. It is a competitive, highly selective school with students from more than thirty countries, which tries in its curriculum and professorate to combine practice and theory.

The Fletcher School is very committed to teaching as well as being a graduate research Institution. The EU Fellow may be invited to teach a policy-oriented course or seminar on a topic of institutional and substantive importance in the European Union with a view to sharing his/her experience of policymaking "from the inside". Instruction and advising students probably therefore will take up a considerable amount of time during the Fellowship. Due to the close administrative relationship between Fletcher and Harvard, and the proximity of other prestigious institutions such as MIT, the Fellow is likely to have possibilities of intellectual interchange within the wider Boston academic, business and political community.

The academic year runs from September 1995 to June 1996.

5. At the Lyndon B. Johnson School of Public Affairs, international Policy Studies, University of Texas, Austin

In its 7th year, the EC Fellowship at the LBJ School will be invited to contribute to the multidisciplinary research of the school through active participation in Policy Research Projects, to give a Masters level course or seminar on European Affairs within the University of Texas to Masters and Doctoral students from the whole system, utilise the resources of the EC Depository and Presidential Library, take a special interest in regional Issues and take the opportunity to work with other academic institutes in the region. Specific research strengths currently include issues around the recently passed North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), The Mexico Free Trade Agreement, Environmental Management of Resources, Latin America, infrastructure and transportation policy.

The School is characterised by a close link to the University of Texas system, the Texas State legislature, the Johnson Presidency, and an international basis and outlook in its staff, other visiting fellows, and students that belies its location. The EC Fellow will be asked to develop contacts in EC institutions for faculty and associated research staff, and support the schools EC stagiaire scheme with preselection of candidates. The EC Fellow can be expected to have to give talks to local political, public interest and business bodies on current issues of EC regulations and policy affecting the working and trading relationships between the US, and specifically Texas, and the EC. There is a level of independent, current, information flow from the main EC bodies, and extensive corpora of catalogued background documents for the Fellow to build on. The academic year starts early in September through to the following May/June period.

6. At the Law School, University of Michigan

The Law School of the University of Michigan is interested in hosting an EC official at some point during the 1995-1996 academic year or later. A minimum period of three or four weeks is desirable; a longer visit also can be useful.

The ordinary purpose of a visit is to offer a course or seminar on some topic within the expert knowledge and experience of the visitor. Any topic relating to the European Commission would be especially welcome. Also welcome would be topics of international trade or international law. The most helpful topics will depend on the topics offered by other short-term visitors from other countries.

Students who already hold bachelor degrees would primarily constitute the participants of the course.

7. At the School of Law, Emory University, Atlanta, Georgia

Emory University is a private university in a residential area six miles east of downtown Atlanta and in close proximity of the Carter Presidential Center, which houses President Carter's Library and archives. Former President Carter is now a University Distinguished Professor at Emory and a visiting Lecturer in the School of Law. The professional program of the School of Law enrolls close to 700 students and has a full-time faculty of 35. The School has a strong program in international and comparative (particularly European) law. Its Library is a depository of EC materials.

Emory Law School is very much interested in broadening its international and comparative law offerings. It is for this reason that it would like to host an EC Fellow. The EC Fellow would teach a regular basic European Community law course (three hours per week), including the administration and grading of the regular American law school type final examination at the end of the semester. The course enrolls, on average, some 30-40 students. In addition, the Fellow should be prepared to give an occasional lecture to a more general university or professional audience.

Some funding by Emory regarding air travel, housing and living expenses can be arranged.

Preferred dates of appointment: mid-August to mid-December .

8. At the Center for West European Studies University of Pittsburgh

The Center for West European Studies will again host a Fellow with a wide range of duties in Pittsburgh, a strongly internationally oriented university.

The Fellow would not teach regular courses but instead would be used as a resource person for undergraduate and graduate students, faculty, and the local business/professional community. The Fellow would be integrated into the many activities of the Center for West European Studies. He or she might, for example, be invited to give general talks on the Community in undergraduate courses, more specialized ones to graduate students in the social sciences, business, and law, and to work at a still more specialized level with doctoral students planning to carry out research in Brussels in his/her area of expertise. If willing, he/she would be invited to address business groups in the city as well as the academic community comprised of small colleges and private universities in the surrounding region.

The person of most interest to the University would be someone with knowledge of institutional reform, environmental policy, economic and monetary issues, industrial affairs, trade and competition policy, regulatory reform, technology policy, or foreign and security policy. A person with broad policy interests rather than a narrow focus is particularly desirable given the variety of audiences who will be interested in the Fellow's expertise. Flexibility and breadth are very important.

Since the Fellow will not be required to teach, stays of three-six months can be easily accommodated. If the Fellow were to be interested in teaching, it may be possible to arrange a course even during an abbreviated stay. For a native speaker of a language other than English, we would hope to provide opportunities for discussions with students in his/her native language. In general, we try to custom-tailor a program for the Fellow so that he/she can use their time at the University of Pittsburgh most productively. We would hope for extensive interaction with the Fellow as soon as possible after the selection takes place.

The University will provide office space, telephone, some secretarial support, and assistance in finding appropriate housing and schooling for the Fellow and his/her family.

B. GUEST SCHOLARSHIP AT THE BROOKINGS INSTITUTION,
WASHINGTON D.C.

The EC Institutions again plan to send a Guest Scholar to the Brookings Institution for a period which normally extends from September to the following June. Although shorter terms are acceptable. It is desirable to have them begin in either September or January. Applications are invited from qualified candidates, preferably at A5 level or above.

Resources

The Brookings Institution has developed over the past seventy-five years as a center for non-partisan research on issues of importance to U.S. society in general and to governmental policy-making in particular. The institution's reputation for excellence is widely known in policy-making circles. The Guest Scholarship at Brookings should be viewed as an opportunity to work on an independent project in an environment that offers accessibility to Washington resources including the Library of Congress, several excellent universities, the Congress and Capitol Hill, in general, as well as colleagues engaged in similar fields of research at the Institution.

Brookings has three research programs -Economic Studies; Foreign Policy Studies; and Governmental Studies- as well as the Center for Public Policy Education (CPPE) which contributes to informed and enlightened decision-making by providing continuing education on significant domestic and foreign policy issues to the world's current and future leaders. More than 2,500 individuals from the public and private sectors each year attend more than 80 conferences held in Washington and locations abroad. The Guest Scholar is expected to select the research program with which he wishes to be associated during his term at Brookings. Regardless of the research program he selects, he will have the option to participate in several CPPE events. As in the past, the contribution of the Guest Scholar to the work of the institution is expected in terms of discussion and communication of research results with Fellows in the same field.

Research Topics

Candidates are expected to suggest their own topics for research, which must be those likely to be in the forefront of public policy both in Europe and the United States during the period of the scholarship. Literature describing the on-going research projects at Brookings can be obtained from Mrs. FORWENT, on telephone number 69719.

PROCEDURE

Selection criteria

As far as the EC-institutions are concerned, the main selection criteria will be the overall calibre of the candidate, taking account of his/her intellectual vigour, analytical capacity, his/her degree of personal initiative, originality in writing and discussion and general knowledge of European Community Policies. For Harvard, the subject of personal study chosen, which should interest both the EC and the C.F.I.A., will be subject to the approval of the Selection Committee.

Qualifications required

- Minimum of five years' experience as a permanent official of one of the Community institutions ;
- Good command of the English language, both written and oral;
- High degree of personal initiative and organizational talent ;
- Good knowledge of Community policies and US-EC relations in general as well as trade Questions in particular;

- Ability to contribute to teaching and discussion on the European Community ;
- Excellent communication skills and "public relations-oriented" ;
- Excellent knowledge of a particular policy of the European Community, which will be the subject of special study, to be defined in the application (please include a one-page description) ;
- Ability to do research.

Conditions

The special terms will be extra-statutory and their duration will be strictly limited to the academic year or semester plus a week beforehand for installation.

Fellows will be reimbursed the reasonable cost of suitable furnished accommodation, within the ceiling permitted for mission hotel expenses (currently 125 ECU/day) and will be paid a daily allowance of 75 ECU (A1-A3) or 60 ECU (other grades) which will be both reduced with 25% by application of the correctional factor applicable for missions of long duration; no derogation from this reduction will be accorded.

Apart from the initial return flight, the unaccompanied Fellow will be reimbursed the cost of 2 more return flights to Brussels (or Luxembourg) during the Fellowship in case of a full academic year. In the case of semester or quarter, the unaccompanied Fellow will be reimbursed pro rata (1 for a semester, none for a quarter). Candidates accompanied by their families will be paid 1 return ticket only for him/herself, spouse and 1 child.

All flights will be on the basis of the most economic rates available, and the weight of personal luggage and necessary documents will be limited to 250 kg on the initial Journey and on return.

N.B. For universities offering a whole academic year, the Coordinating Committee will endeavour to negotiate shorter periods of studies if so required.
